"NEWS YOU CAN USE"

NEWSLETTER...SPRING 2014

THE GOOD THE BAD AND THE UGLY

In politics today there is a great deal of discussion on the erosion of the middle class. It is said that we are turning into a nation of "haves" and "have-nots" with the disparity growing larger year after year. In fact, statistics show that the share of this nation's wealth owned by the top one percent grew from 34.6% to 37.1% just since 2008 alone. Truly astounding, and some would say appalling, numbers; however, we will not enter into that philosophical debate here.

What we will do is continue with the theory of "haves" and "have-nots" as it has never been more prevalent in the restaurant industry than it is today, especially as it pertains to real estate. Everyone old enough to be reading this newsletter has heard about the Three Golden Rules of Real Estate... location... location... LOCATION! Although this phrase has been seen in print as early as 1926, it has never been more applicable than it is today. As much as the restaurant industry has changed over the years, and it has changed a great deal, this "golden rule" has even more impact to the potential success of a restaurant than it has at any time in the past 20+ years.

The advent of computerization and standardized use of technology, not only for restaurants and bars, but in shopping centers and by landlords as well, along with the proliferation of multi-unit restaurants, has provided a great deal of data that allows for the comparison of locations. Based upon the examination of this data, it is clear that choosing the correct location for your business is the single greatest factor in determining its success. Many of you may say, "Well of course, we knew that selecting the location was important." You would then be surprised to hear that in many transactions the location was not the determining factor, or even a top priority.

Many other factors seem to cloud the restaurateur's judgment. Things like rent rate, visibility, convenience, parking and building configuration are some of the known aspects that influence the decision on where to locate their business. Wait, aren't these location based factors that should be taken into consideration? NO! First and foremost, choosing where your business should be located is all about defining the food and/or beverage concept, determining the ideal target market for those goods and services and based upon solid research, locating the business where it has the highest probable opportunity for success because there is a sufficiently dense clientele base available to support it. Once this process is complete, and ONLY then, should all of the other numerous issues receive due consideration and be factored into the equation.

Why is this methodology important? Let's start with the most basic example, rent. While the business model for your restaurant concept does play a role in determining a range of affordability, the difference between success and failure is rarely the rent rate. In almost every instance it is the revenue rate. For example, if you choose a location with a $5,000 per month rent and generate $10,000 per week in revenue, odds are that this location will not be profitable; rent in this instance would be 12.5% of revenue. If instead you choose to pay $6,000 (20% more) and the better location generated $15,000 per week, rent as a percentage of sales would be reduced to 10%, thereby significantly increasing the opportunity for profitability. Rent must be considered as a portion of revenue, not just a dollar amount per square foot to be paid as overhead. If the revenue is available, expenses can be taken care of with ample profit dollars left over. If sufficient revenue is not being produced, there is no way to be profitable; the fixed costs will consume every dollar of sales generated, and then some.

KNOW your business! Clearly define the offering, seek out the target market for that offering and find a suitable location in that target-rich environment. It's the best possible recipe for success!

Federal forecasters estimate retail food prices will rise as much as 3.5% this year, the biggest annual increase in three years, as a drought in parts of the U.S. and other producing regions drives up prices for many agricultural goods. The Bureau of Labor Statistics on Tuesday reported that food prices gained 0.4% in February from the previous month, the biggest increase since September 2011, as prices rose for meat, poultry, fish, dairy and eggs.

Much of the rise in the food cost comes from higher meat and dairy prices, due in part to tight cattle supplies after years of drought in states such as Texas and California and rising milk demand from fast-growing Asian countries. But prices also are higher for fruits, vegetables, sugar and beverages, according to government data. In futures markets, coffee prices have soared so far this year more than 70%, hogs are up 42% on disease concerns and cocoa has climbed 12% on rising demand, particularly from emerging markets.

The U.S. Department of Agriculture estimated last month that retail food prices will rise between 2.5% and 3.5% this year, up from 1.4% last year. The inflation comes despite sharp decreases over the past year in the prices of grains, including corn, after a big U.S. harvest. In other years—notably 2008—surging grain prices were a key contributor to higher food costs.

Food prices have gained 2.8%, on average, for the past 10 years, outpacing the increase in prices for all goods, which rose 2.4%, according to the government. Overall consumer prices are expected to rise 1.9% this year, according to economists surveyed by The Wall Street Journal.
